Volunteer Connection formed

Group organizes volunteers

by Clint Fisher

Students who wish to help out in their community now have a program at their disposal that makes it possible to find volunteer work in the community easily. Volunteer Connection is an organization created to organize volunteer effort in the community.

The formation of the organization began in 1992, when Margaret Gosey, executive director of the Fort Smith chapter, assembled a task force to determine if Fort Smith was in need of a program such as Volunteer Connection. In the spring of 1993, an assessment was done through the Times Record which received an 85% affirmative response.

Volunteer Connection was then granted a phone and office by the City of Fort Smith, as well as partial funding for its operating budget in April 1995. The organization plans to move from its city office to an office at St. Scholastica early next year.

According to Gosey, the main goal for the organization is to serve as a catalyst for volunteer work in the community. It will also place people in areas where they will be able to participate in programs that they enjoy and where they will feel appreciated.

"Most people have to either work or go to school, so the one or two hours a week they can give need to be spent wisely," Gosey said.

Gosey and her secretary, Karen Shornhorst, are the two principle employees for the organization. They are employed for 20 hours of work a week but they often work in excess of 40 hours a week.

For Westark students interested in participating in volunteer programs in the community, sign-up sheets are available in Fullerton Union.

Students who wish to volunteer are then contacted, an interview is set up to determine when that student would be most needed, what type of work they would be best suited for, and where they will work in the community.

The student must fill out a form, which is then sent to the Volunteer Connection office. Volunteers will receive a reply within two weeks and are then placed in a volunteer program in the community.

Wedding bells bring obstacles??

For 15 months now, my fiance', Justin, and I have been planning a wedding, with help from my mother (more help than I like at times). Finally, the time has come. The "big day" is just one day around the corner, and I've almost survived one of the craziest times in my life. We may have to move the wedding from the church to the insane asylum before long, and I may have to buy a wig to hold my veil on because I've been going crazy enough to pull my hair out.

It all started last September when he popped the question. When we told my parents, we were both nervous. He was sitting right next to the door, ready to jump up and run out.

I'm an only child, so I knew that my parents would be in shock for a little while, but I didn't expect my mother's initial response. She said that "this was not a funny joke."

My dad, however, has been noticing that I'm no longer in the fifth grade and my pig-tails are gone. He just smiled and told us he was happy. He was happy, however, because he thought that we were going to tell them that we had eloped.

After my father calmed my mother down and convinced her that Justin and I were getting married, whether she wanted us to or not, she gave us her blessing.

We started planning the wedding right away. First, we decided on a date. Dec. 16 was a good date for both him and me, but after months of trying to find a preacher, church, and musicians not already busy doing Christmas presentations, we decided to change the date from Dec. 16 (right after finals week) to Dec. 2 (days before finals week)!

The date was only the first in a series of problems and conflicts.

I found the perfect dress and we bought it in May. That was seven months and 20 pounds ago, so when I went for my fitting, the back wouldn't zip all the way up.

So the dress shop sent the gown to the seamstress and gave me an appointment to come back. When I went back, they couldn't find the dress! I about went crazy, but I had to keep telling myself that the seamstress still had it, which she did. And now, with a little tampering with my schedule, I made another appointment for my last fitting.

My dress wasn't the only thing missing at one time or another. My cousin Phil is a candlelighter and he shaved his head (completely bald) just a few weeks before the wedding, so we'll get that beautiful candlelight glow from the top of his head. He says it'll grow out by Saturday. We'll see.

Also, Phil may be alone lighting those candles. Just six days before the wedding, my second candlelighter let me know that he couldn't make it. The search is on for a new one.

We've encountered so many more problems that I won't go into detail about. From the postage on the invitations to the color of the bridesmaids' shoes, I feel that I have acquired some wisdom from this ordeal. My advice to couples planning weddings—ELOPE!!

Telemarketing campaign kicks off

by Billy Burr

Recruiting is an important part of a college's success. In order to improve enrollment, Westark is instituting a telemarketing campaign.

Scott McDonald has been hired as Supervisor of Telemarketing. McDonald is a graduate of the University of Arkansas with a degree in Public Administration.

McDonald is currently looking to hire 4 people. He is looking at around 15 different applicants.

"We are looking for students that really love to go to school here and can sell it, upbeat people who don't mind rejection, because we will get people that are not interested in going to Westark. We are also looking for University Center students," McDonald said.

Telemarketers will call prospective students who have filled out information cards, and will get names from adult programs. They will answer questions and send out information and then call back every four to six weeks, checking on the prospective students and helping them decide if Westark is for them.

The telemarketers will use several key points to help prospective students decide where to go to college.

Westark's small size, where a student can receive personalized instruction, is one. Closeness to home is another, and affordability will be mentioned. The University Center will be a big selling point, as well as Westark's many technical programs.

So far, the response has been slow. But McDonald enjoys the positive atmosphere and the people on campus, and is looking forward to a successful campaign.

"I love it here. The people are wonderful, and it's a nice change from the U of A. The people, the students, they are just wonderful," McDonald said.

In addition to McDonald, Westark recruiting has also added recruiter Greg Gibbons. Gibbons visits high schools and college fairs to help those students find out more about their college opportunities at Westark. Gibbons, a Westark graduate, received a bachelor's degree in chemical engineering from the University of Arkansas, and plans to attend University of Arkansas Medical School.

Bella Italia

by Leanna Humphries

Wishing their diners "Buon Appetito" for over a year now, Bella Italia at the corner of 8th Street and "D" (formerly Tom Foolery's) has given culinary delight to business groups, families, friends and couples looking for a romantic setting.

Owner Mohammed Raache says that he has only advertised the restaurant twice since its opening, and business has been pretty good. Raache, who greets patrons at the door with a smile, lists three reasons why people come to Bella Italia. He says that people come for the authentic, unique food made to order with fresh herbs and cheeses served by a professional and friendly staff.

The atmosphere is listed as the third reason to come to Bella Italia. In historic downtown Fort Smith, this turn of the century building has a friendly charm with its stained glass, romantic candlelit nooks and soft music.

Before the entree' is served, diners enjoy bisquetta (small piece of hard bread with a tomato sauce), fresh made pizza, and salad, all garnished with freshly grated parmesian cheese.

Lunch and dinner menus are both available. Patrons have choices of large portions including soups, steaks, chicken, veal, pasta specialties, seafood, lasagna and fettucine. A complete wine list and desert are also offered.

The Tiramisu is a must try for chocolate lovers. This desert is a New York style cream cheese cake with Italian pastry in the middle. Chocolate stripes coat the top with a chocolate crust and is topped with a choicated coated coffee bean.

While dining at Bella Italia, a customer was overheard saying that "this is better than Olive Garden," and so are the prices.

Dinner for two, including desert will cost an average of just over $25. Alcoholic beverages and appetizers will raise that price.

Bella Italia is open on Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. and from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Saturdays. Reservations are strongly recommended, especially on weekends. For reservations or more information, call 785-1550 or fax at 785-5551.

Varsity worth the price

Large portions, a laid-back atmosphere, and moderate prices combine to make Varsity Sports Grill Fort Smith's newest hot spot.

Varsity recently opened in renovated Adelaide Hall at 318 Garrison Avenue. The laid-back atmosphere is apparent by televisions that hang from every corner. Hardwood covers almost every available surface. There are also pool tables, video games and a disk jockey. Patrons may come alone and sit at a bar that divides the restaurant into two separate rooms, or in groups and sit in dark corners.

With all this atmosphere, visitors might expect to pay moderate amounts of money, and they do.

Restaurant goers should expect to pay $6 to $10 dollars per entree. However, the food portions are large enough to justify the price.

Varsity's menu offers a wide selection of food including mountainous salads, eight slice pizzas, four-inch thick hamburgers and sandwiches, pasta and seafood dishes, dinner entrees, deserts and a choice of appetizers large enough to double as meals themselves.

Any visit to Varsity should include one of several items. Varsity Potato Skins are one of these items. The skins are whole potatoes that have been split in half, hollowed out and baked with large amounts of Cheddar and Monterey Jack cheeses, bacon bits and sour cream. An order of skins consists of four potatoes. Half orders may also be requested.

Another must-try is the Pepperoni Calzone Pizza. Varsity takes Ricotta cheese, spinach and pepperoni, folds it into a calzone crust and bakes it. This dish is best when cut into bits and dipped into pizza sauce.

Eighty-four other menu items are available. This guarantees that any guest will have trouble making up their mind.

All this food is served in a helpful manner by employees who will assist visitors without needlessly annoying them.

Varsity Sports Grill is open seven days a week. Service starts at 11 a.m. The bar closes at 1 a.m. A full menu is served until 10:30 p.m. Monday through Wednesday, with appetizers served until 11 p.m. Thursday through Saturday the full menu is served until 11 p.m., and appetizers are no longer served at 12 a.m. Varsity's number is (501) 494-7173.

Christmas on the Green

Students sing for Noon Show

by Tracy Morrie

Although Student Activities plans a variety of Noon Shows, not all shows allow student participation. Friday, Dec. 8, however, students may participate in a Noon Show titled Christmas on the Green.

Dr. Stephen Husarik, Westark Carillonneur, will play Christmas music on the tower bells.

Directly following Husarik's performance, Student Activities will organize student Christmas caroling. The entire Noon Show should last for 20-30 minutes.

"We will invite as many students as possible to join us. Pamela Schultz, director of First Edition, will help us get some singers out," Stacey Jones, director of Student Activities, said.

Student Activities has been planning the Noon Show for several months. Originally, Christmas on the Green was planned as an evening event.

Due to late planning, the schedule was changed.

"We [Student Activities] wanted to have 300 voices singing contemporary songs. We planned to invite area church and high school choral groups, but many of them had other plans for Dec. 8, so, we had to change the plans," Jones said.

Along with area churches and Christmas programs scheduled that night, the ballet production of The Nutcracker also opens.

In January, Student Activities will form a committee to plan Christmas on the Green as a large-scale activity for next year.

"I would like to ask several high school and church choral directors to join the committee, but right now I don't know who I will ask," Jones said.

For more information about Christmas on the Green, contact Student Activities at 788-7301.

Outstanding students honored

by Jessica Graves

Each year, the Fort Smith Public Awareness Committee (PAC) selects seven outstanding students, chosen from sophomores of the seven divisions.

"The students are chosen through a criteria that was set up about 20 years ago, which deals with the student's GPA and their leadership at Westark and in the community," Richard Gordon, president of the PAC, said.

As their outstanding student, members of the Technology Division chose Katrina Coleman, drafting technology major, from Mountainburg, who will graduate this spring. She was selected into the Scholar-Preceptor Program.

The Division of Social and Behavioral Science chose Kylee Connor, psychology major, from Fort Smith. She has accumulated 25 credit hours with a 4.0 GPA.

She plans to study journalism and get her master's degree in counseling psychology.

The Division of Humanities chose Leanna (Humphries) DeLeon, journalism major, from Pocola, OK. She is the editor of Lion Pride, a member of the Pride of Westark and the Westark Honors Organization (WHO).

The Division of Business selected Julie Dunn, office administration major, from Mansfield.

She has been on the Dean's List every semester since starting at Westark.

Dunn received the Ralph and Melanie Speer Scholarship, which is based on ACT scores.

The Outstanding Student for the Division of Computer Information Systems is Glenda Jordan, microcomputer applications major, from Fort Smith. She is the mother of two girls.

After graduating from Southside High School in 1984, she worked as a registered dental assistant and is pursuing a career change.

The Division of Health Occupations chose Anissa Miller, nursing major, from Fort Smith. She is a member of the Arkansas National Guard and the Sebastian County Democratic Women.

She holds the office of assistant secretary of the Lincoln Child Care Parent Booster Club and is the president of the Student Nurses Association, Westark Chapter.

The Division of Science,

Math and Engineering selected Charles Stevens, chemical engineering major, from Fort Smith. He plans to transfer to the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville in the fall of 1996 to complete his engineering degree, and then apply for admission to medical school.

Charles has played the trumpet with the Westark Jazz and Concert bands. He is also a member of the Pre-Medical Students Association.

"Students can be mothers, fathers, traditional or non-traditional. It doesn't matter," Dr. Terry Barnes, vice president for instruction, said.

These outstanding students will be honored at a reception sponsored by the Sheraton Inn and an awards ceremony on Dec. 7 in the Flanders Building Lecture Hall.

CULTURAL EXCHANGE

by Clint Fisher

One year ago, a Japanese native left her home, family, friends, and career to come half way around the world to teach the language and culture of Japan at Christ the King Catholic school.

"My friends said I was crazy. They told me that I should not quit my job. They said that when I got here I would not have any money," Miyuki Hori, undeclared major, said.

Hori grew up in Tokyo. At the age of 18, she attended an all women's junior college in Tokyo as a home economics major.

Over the course of two years, Hori accumulated 44 credit hours. Hori explained that just getting into college in Tokyo was difficult.

"In Japan, we have to take a test before we can become a student at any college. I had to study six to eight hours every day to prepare for the exam," Hori said.

After junior college, Hori went to work at a bank in Tokyo where she worked for the next eight years until she joined the exchange program.

How does a person travel from Tokyo, Japan to Fort Smith, Arkansas, USA, leaving behind everything and everyone she has ever known?

"I was reading the paper one day, and I saw an ad in the paper for the exchange program. I thought it was interesting, so I applied and was accepted," Hori said.

When she came to America, Hori taught at Christ the King for a year before deciding to enroll in college.

"I realized that when I was teaching students at Christ the King, I had trouble communicating with them, and that is why I wanted to go to school here," Hori said.

CULTURAL DIFFERENCES EXPLAINED

Explaining the differences between the Japanese and English languages is Miyuki Hori. Miyuki is currently enrolled at Westark.

Hori said that she believes Westark is a very good college, even better than the junior college she attended in Tokyo.

"Classes averaged 40 people and most of the time, the instructor didn't even know your name. However, here at Westark, the staff is very good and very kind," Hori said.

Hori describes Japanese schools as tough. For instance, Japanese students must learn three separate forms of written language. One of the languages was developed after World War II for people coming into Japan. This language was meant to make trade easier between Japan and other countries. The second form of written language is the common form of written language used in Japan. These two languages consist of 48 symbols each, twice as many as the English language.

The third language is composed of approximately 5,000 symbols, each with their own meaning. For example, the name Miyuki consists of two symbols, the first meaning deep and the second meaning snow. Hori stated that this is a common practice in Japanese culture.

"I was born in November and it had just snowed. That is why my parents named me Miyuki," Hori said.

According to Hori, other than having specific meanings, Japanese names are also spoken and written using the last name first and the first name last.

International students must take an examination called the Test of English as a Foreign Language. To enter Westark, an international student must score 450 of 600 possible points.

"The test was very hard. It took me about three and a half hours to complete," Hori said.

According to Hori, the Japanese culture is not as different from American culture as most Americans think. Although there are differences, such as the fact that the Japanese drink iced coffee and eat raw fish, there are many similarities between American culture and Japanese culture.

"In Tokyo, we had a lot of fast food restaurants, which we really like. After work, I would often go out with co-workers to have drinks, where we might talk about our boss or do karaoke," Hori said.

Hori hopes to graduate from Westark in two years and return to Japan to teach the Japanese language to people coming into the country.

"There are a lot of South Asians who come to Japan to work, and I would like to help them learn Japanese," Hori said.

Currently, Hori is enrolled in 16 credit hours and is active in Student Activities Council and the Multicultural Club.

Center looks to repeat as national champions

by Tim Higgins and Clint Fisher

A native of south Chicago, Lady Lion Alisa Burris, communications major, looks forward to a season repeat after being a part of the 35-0 championship team last year.

"I think Westark has a real fine basketball program. It is a winning program with nice coaches and nice players. Everyone here welcomed me with open arms," Burris said.

The 6'2" center averaged an outstanding 18 points per game as well as an average of eight rebounds per game last season. This season, Burris is working more toward improving her outside game and shot.

According to Coach Louis Whorton, women's head basketball coach, because of her accomplishments, Burris has become a true asset to the Westark Lady Lions program.

"Besides being one of the best players in the country Burris is also a great leader off the court. That kind of leadership can't be taught. She is a real down to earth young lady," Whorton said.

Winning the National Championship and receiving the most valuable player of the regional tournament are among Burris's greatest achievements.

Burris did not begin playing basketball until her freshman year in high school where she played for the varsity team.

"My dad pushed me to play basketball when I was younger, but I didn't seriously start playing until high school. I really enjoy playing now," Burris said.

In the future, Burris hopes to have a career in broadcast journalism. Until then, she is looking toward basketball to further fund her education. Despite already receiving several recruitment letters from universities, Burris has narrowed her college choices to DePaul, Louisiana State, and Michigan University.

"After I finish my two years here, I plan to go to a university. Then I might go overseas, or tryout for the Olympic Team. After I complete my basketball career, I plan to go back and finish my major in communications," Burris said. The ladies will close out the '95 year by hosting St. Gregory Dec. 4, and traveling to Rose State Dec. 7. Westark will play back-to-back games against Western on Dec. 9 at home and Jan. 6 at Western.

Kaundart spirit lives on

Coach leaves legacy

by Tim Higgins

With the passing of former Westark Basketball Head Coach Gayle Kaundart, a definite impression and mark of excellence has remained to blanket the College.

Kaundart began coaching at Westark during in 1974. His career developed into 13 winning seasons with the Lions. In his first year as a college coach, Kaundart's team pulled together an outstanding 32-4 record.

Westark Athletic Director Jim Wyatt came to the Lion's basketball program as Kaundart's assistant in 1974.

"I think he brought a prestige to the Westark program that no one else could have at that time," Wyatt said.

Head Coach Kaundart and Assistant Coach Wyatt combined for seven bi-state titles, as well as seven regional titles. In each of the 13 seasons Kaundart coached at Westark, the Lions managed to grab another state title. Kaundart added an explanation point to his impressive record with the capture of the Junior College National Championship in the spring of '81, despite a slow start with an even 2-2 record.

"With what he brought to

the Westark program, it absolutely took us to another level. There was a time when Kaundart was more of a disciplinarian," Wyatt said.

As the players and the game evolved, so did Coach Kaundart. Tom McKinney played under Kaundart's Northside High School Grizzly ball team when they captured the state title in 1965. From there, McKinney picked up a scholarship to UCA. After completing college, McKinney began a 25 year coaching career.

"One example of Kaundart's character adaptability that I remember best occurred during our first year here. The players had just won a ball game, and we were on our way back to Fort Smith. After each road win, the players would start a song that involved calling a player's name out loud," Wyatt said.

"When a name was called, the player would perform a little dance in the middle aisle of the bus. The kids finally got brave enough to include the coaches. When Coach Kaundart got up and danced, it was something the team really enjoyed. Dancing was not one of his strong suits," he said.

"There was a time when the song never would have occurred. That was one of his strongest qualities. His ability to change with situations, and still get the job done," Wyatt added.

Kaundart's accomplishments earned him a spot in the Arkansas Sports Hall of Fame, and in the University of the Ozarks Hall of Fame after his retirement from Westark in 1987.

A champion in every respect, Kaundart will be remembered for the intangible gifts he gave to those fortunate enough to know him.
